

Indiana University Field School in Archaeology

Anthropology P405
May 12th – June 18th 2009

In the summer of 2009, Indiana University and the Glenn A. Black Laboratory of Archaeology will offer an archaeological field school at the Angel Mounds State Historic Site near Evansville Indiana. Excavations will be guided by the results of a large-scale geophysical remote sensing survey of the site.

The majority of the course will be devoted to hands-on instruction in archaeological survey and excavation techniques, the documentation of archaeological remains, and the interpretation of archaeological data. In addition, geoarchaeological and geophysical remote sensing instruction will be offered. Preliminary laboratory analysis will be interspersed with the fieldwork. Intensive lectures in the first few days will provide students with a background in various aspects of Indiana prehistory and with information on a variety of research methods and field techniques.

The field school is an important part of the research program of the Glenn A. Black Laboratory of Archaeology at Indiana University. Most field schools over the last decade also have focused on Late Prehistoric sites in central Indiana. The result of this work is an extensive array of published reports on settlement patterns, site structure and function, remote sensing, and analyses of pottery and of plant and animal remains from the excavated sites.

Credits, Admission, Tuition, Transportation & Supplies

This course, Anthropology P405, will carry six semester hours of academic credit and will be open to both undergraduate and graduate students. Class will meet from May 12th to June 18th. Housing and transportation to and from the site are the responsibility of students; major field equipment and most expendable supplies will be furnished. Students will be responsible for tuition and fees assessed for six semester hours of credit, for food and housing costs while in Evansville (estimated housing costs are $400-800), and for personal excavation supplies costing less than $40.00.

Applications & Information:

Admission to the field school is by application only. Applications and further information are available at: Glenn A. Black Laboratory of Archaeology, 423 N. Fess St., Indiana University, Bloomington, IN 47408-3800; Phone: (812) 855-9544; Fax: (812) 855-1864.

Or send email to Christopher Peebles, peebles@indiana.edu

Applications are available from the lab web site at <http://www.gbl.indiana.edu/fschool/fschool2009.html>

Applications are available now; they should be mailed to or dropped off at the Lab and are due no later than 5:00 p.m. on March 31st. Space is very limited, so please fill out and return applications as soon as possible.